Family Ran Eating Place Begun In 1869

Charles L. Feltman, seventy-eight, for many years famous proprietor of Feltman's Restaurant on Surf Avenue, Coney Island, died in his home, 180 Eighth Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y.

The restaurant was established in 1869 by Mr. Feltman's father, Charles Feltman, as a small, seaside eating place. At that time Coney Island was a remote spot, a visit to which was an all-day expedition. As the resort developed, the restaurant grew with it. There was a racetrack near by, Brighton Beach was a fashionable resort and Long Island Rail Road trains brought larger numbers each year.

By 1923, when the Boardwalk was built, Feltman's extended for two blocks along Surf Avenue and ran back to the Boardwalk. It included nine separate eating places, two bars, a carousel, shooting galleries and other entertainment spots. Much of its development came under the management of Charles L. Feltman, who had the assistance for many years of his brother, Alfred Feltman.

Mr. Feltman's father was credited with having introduced the "hot dog" to the country after conceiving the idea of serving a frankfurter in an elongated roll, sandwich style. When the elder Feltman died in 1910, his sons took over operation of the restaurant and continued as its proprietors until their retirement three years ago.

When Mr. Feltman's father established the business in 1869, it was near Stillwell Avenue, Coney Island, but in 1871 he moved to the present location between West Tenth Street and Jones Walk. Mr. Feltman's father died in 1910 and he and his brother, who had grown [illegible]

They both retired in 1940 and sold the restaurant to Benno M. Bechhold, executive vice-president of the Savoy-Plaza Hotel, Alvan Kalman and Harry Socoloff.

Mr. Feltman served as Presidential elector when President Woodrow Wilson was elected for the first time. He was a Mason and a member of the Gravesend Exempt Firemen's Association and the Montauk Club.

His wife, Mrs. Emma S. Feltman; a son, Charles A. Feltman; two daughters, Mrs. Mildred Schaefer and Mrs. Mavis Harcourt; his brother, Alfred Feltman, and five grandchildren survive.

Poland To Relax Curb On Exodus Of Jews

The Polish Government is planning a broad liberalisation of its policy governing the emigration of Jews to Israel. It is expected that within a month a program will be inaugurated whereby any Polish Jew willing to renounce his Polish citizenship will be permitted to leave the country for Israel.

Since the early months of this year the emigration of Polish Jews has been extremely limited. An average of only 200 Jews has been permitted to leave monthly since the common campaign of the eastern European countries against Zionism began in January. Once this program, which is being developed by Minister of Public Administration Wladislaw Wolski, is initiated Poland will be the fourth eastern European country to permit almost unrestricted emigration, Jewish sources explained.

According to these sources, approximately 34,000 Jews have emigrated from Bulgaria this year, leaving a Jewish population of 3,000 to 4,000. In the same period approximately 6,000 have left Yugoslavia and double that number have left Czechoslovakia. Migration on a large scale still continues from those countries.

Only Rumania and Hungary, the two eastern European countries with the largest Jewish populations, have continued a rigid policy on Jewish emigration, according to the New York Times. An estimated 280,000 Jews remain in Rumania and 150,000 in Hungary. Jewish leaders hope the Polish move can be taken as an indication that similar steps may be taken by Hungary and Rumania.

Government spokesmen are unwilling to disclose details of the migration plan. However, it is assumed that under it any Jew who wants to leave will be allowed to do so within the year that the plan is operative. There is no indication how much property such emigrants will be allowed to take

To Encourage Inflow Of U.S. Capital

General Zionism, a middle-of-the-road political philosophy somewhat to the right of the present Ben-Gurion administration, will grow in Israel and will stimulate the development of private enterprise, it was predicted by Charles Ress, president of Palestine Foundation Fund.

Mr. Ress expressed his views in an interview at New York International Airport, Idlewild, Queens, on his return by plane from a two week trip to Israel. The Palestine Foundation Fund, known as Keren Hayesod, spent $35,000,000 in Israel last year, financing immigration and colonization. It is one of the agencies supported by the United Jewish Appeal.

Emphasizing that housing is still Israel's number one problem, Mr. Ress said great strides are being made toward the erection of new homes. He predicted that within a year all persons in reception camps, who are estimated at more than 60,000, would be in their own homes.

Discussing business as distinct from agriculture, Mr. Ress said that at least 90 per cent of the country's industrial plants are under private ownership. He cited the government's program, now before the Knesset, or Parliament, to stimulate foreign investment in Israel by making tax and other concessions, and predicted that when the bills become law much new foreign capital will be poured into Israel.

The Zionist Organization of America is the general Zionist group, with an orientation toward private enterprise. In Israel the general Zionists have been divided, and they are less powerful relatively there than they are among American Jewry.

In stressing Israel's major problem of integrating the flow of immigrants into its economic framework, Mr. Ress said that the Government had offered to industry certain inducements through the waiver of taxes, the importation of duty-free machinery and other concessions, including liberal depreciation allowances for taxation purposes.

Most privately invested capital, he said, comes from and will continue to come from the United States. Mass immigration requires industrial and agricultural expansion, he said, as "more jobs can be provided to the newcomers through industry than in agriculture."

The government of Israel, seeking $2,000,000,000 in private capital from abroad to industrialize the nation's economy, is pushing through the Knesset, or Parliament, a twelve-point program of tax reduction and other inducements to foreign business men.

Details of the government's legislative program to encourage foreign investment as well as information concerning the labor market, availability of resources and the prospects for each of various specific industries — are contained in a fifty-page brochure to be made available to banks and prospective private investors, says the New York Herald Tribune.

The brochure, directed mainly to Americans from whom Israel hopes to get the most of its private capital, was written by P.. Bernard Nortman, an economist on the staff of the Jewish Agency for Palestine. The Jewish Agency was the spokesman for Palestinian Jews during the British Mandate. The Agency co-operates with the Israeli government, and its pronouncements can be construed as semi-official.

"Israel leaders are cognizant of the economy's foreign capital requirements," the report stated. "They will do everything in their power, consistant with the well being of their people, to attract investors. Private investors will find Israel a place where hard work, energy, talent and managerial ability has and will continue to be well rewarded. The limited resources of Israel will not permit unlimited exploitation and excessive return on investment, but the capacities of its people and the tremendous growth of the country provide an environment for sound private business investment.

"To encourage the inflow of foreign capital, Israel will give new investors favored treatment including certain concessions, tax exemptions, etc., but it will not grant demands that endanger its sovereignty, jeopardize its security and economic development, or represent privileges that would be given by no other democratic country in the world."

The government program, now before the Knesset, provides: buildings erected since the establishment of the state should be exempt from land-registry fees (with certain exemptions); amortization of new investments for income tax purposes may be calculated at 20 or 25 per cent the first year, 20 per cent the second year, 15 per cent for the third and fourth years and 10 per cent thereafter, and income and corporate tax concessions will be made to private businesses.

Also, reciprocity agreements will be made with other governments to avoid double taxation; imports of machinery and raw materials for capital projects will be duty free: interest, dividends and profits may be withdrawn from Israel, in a limited degree, in the currency in which investment was made; land will be made available free or at low rent for long terms for essen-

H.U. To Study Ruins For Light On Old Cult

The first archaeological discovery of modern times concerning the Samaritans was made known by Prof. E. L. Sukenik, of Hebrew University. Considered one of the most important finds in the Holy Land, it sheds new light on this strange cult about which little is known.

The archaeological diggings were carried on under machine-gun protection. The site near Latrun is on the border of the No Man's Land that separates Arab and Israeli forces. During five weeks of excavations, the Israeli soldiers set up guard about the workmen to defend them against possible attack, but all remained quiet and the excavation was completed even before schedule.

Occasionally at night infiltrations were made from the Arab side and some tools stolen, but Professor Sukenik said nothing more serious occurred. He had been advised to wait until after formal peace was established, but he feared the site might be tampered with.

A main discovery was two mosaic floors built one upon the other and belonging to a Samaritan synagogue of the fourth and fifth century A.D. The synagogue faced Mount Gerizim, near Nablus, the center from earliest times of Samaritan worship, and the seat today of a surviving Samaritan group.

The Samaritans had always styled themselves as the true Israelites, successors of the northern kingdom of Old Testament times, as opposed to the Judeans in the south. Their main break with Judea and Judaism is traced to the time of the Maccabees (second century B.C.).

The site of the Samaritan synagogue [illegible] Latrun and Ramleh, eighteen miles northwest of Jerusalem. It was discovered accidentally by soldiers, who had dug a few feet below the surface when they came upon a handsome mosaic floor, says the New York Times.

When Professor Sukenik and his university associates went to work, they found the second floor just below. The synagogue was probably destroyed in the fifth century A. D. during the Samaritan revolt (against Roman Catholic rule, about 480). The lower mosaic shows an inlaid medallion bearing symbolic reference to Mount Gerizim, flanked by two candelabra.

There is an inscription in Greek that has not yet been deciphered and also, written in ancient Hebrew, a verse of the song of Moses in Exodus XV, 18, transcribed according to the Samaritan version, which differs slightly from that of the Jews.

The building, containing courtyard, outer hall and prayer hall, was about forty-five feet long. The ruins extended directly under some Arab houses.

Both floors of the synagogue already have been removed to the Hebrew University under authority of the Israeli Department of Antiquities, and a complete study will be made of the inscriptions with the hope of casting new light on the Samaritans. Never before have any of their inscriptions been found. The few remaining Samaritans, numbering not more than 150, who live in the Nablus area, claim to have ancient manuscripts proving their heritage, but experts disagree with them as to the age of these documents.

U.S. Denies Demand For Part Of Negeb To Arabs But Hints At Israeli Concessions

Daniel Frisch, president of the Zionist Organization of America, asserted that he had been assured by George McGhee, head of Near Eastern and African Affairs for the U.S. State Department that the United States Government did not intend to exercise "special pressure" on Israel to admit a specified number of Arabs into the new country.

The Zionist official, who met with Mr. McGhee in Washington, added that the State Department official denied that the Government had called for the transfer of the southern part of the Negeb to the Arabs.

Mr. Frisch made his statements at a meeting of the organization's administrative council and executive committee at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, which concluded a two-day session. It was the first such session since he assumed the presidency at the last convention.

The State Department later called upon Israelis and Arabs to make further concessions in order to reach a general settlement of the Palestine problem.

Press Officer Lincoln White told a news conference both sides should be motivated "by a spirit of constructive compromise" if the deadlocked peace talks at Lausanne, Switzerland, are to succeed. Mr. White made the statement in commenting on the remarks of Daniel Frisch, president of the Zionist Organization of America.

Mr. White termed Mr. Frisch's statement "correct", but he emphasized this did not mean that the State Department did not want further concession, both with respect to refugees and territory, the New York Herald Tribune reports.

Recent dispatches, while not [illegible] Israeli Government to admit 250,000 Arabs and to relinquish the lower part of the Negeb, desert area in the South. Other dispatches had reported the Israeli Government willing to take back 100,000 Arabs but determined not to surrender the Negeb.

As a result of these reports, Mr. Frisch said, he had communicated with Secretary of State Dean Acheson to voice "the deep concern of the membership of the ZOA regarding the reported increasing pressure upon the State of Israel by our Government." This communication, he added, resulted in his meeting with Mr. McGhee.

Mr. Frisch said that Mr. McGhee had told him that the State Department's role in the problem was that of an "honest broker," interested in bringing the Arab States and Israel together "in a spirit of conciliation," according to the New York Times.

It was at this point, Mr. Frisch said, that Mr. McGhee denied that the United States Government had insisted on the repatriation of 250,000 Arabs or mentioned any definite figures. The State Department official, however, Mr. Frisch continued, said that Israel must offer a figure concerning the number of refugees.

"We want the State Department to feel that we take their assurances at face value," he said, "because it is inconceivable to me that President Truman or the State Department would make demands, which, if enforced, would spell the very opposite of what the Israeli Government was trying to create. Taking in 250,000 Arabs or taking away part of the Negeb would make Israel a state in name only."

Mr. Frisch, who recently returned from a four-week visit to Israel, said that the Israeli government "admittedly under pressure from Washington, has consented to the admission of 100,000 Arab refugees, which in itself constitutes a tremendous concession."

Mr. Frisch [illegible] Mr. McGhee [illegible] Israelis "to obtain such concessions from each side as would make peace possible." He quoted Mr. McGhee as saying that "an altogether different picture would be created if it were possible to

Bureau Denies Man In Fraud Case Is Rabbi

The metropolitan press of New York and other cities, and the news services have published stories concerning a rabbi, S. Eichenstein, indicted in New York for fraund in connection with Israel. The Jewish Statistical Bureau which maintains registries of rabbis of all wings of American Judaism has issued a statement denying that the indicted person was a rabbi. The statement follows:

Solomon Eichenstein is not a rabbi, according to the records of the Jewish Statistical Bureau, Dr. H. S. Linfield, director of the Bureau, stated. Solomon Eichenstein is not ordained and he does not serve as a rabbi in a congregation. Nor is he a member of any of the national or city-wide associations of rabbis. The Jewish Statistical Bureau has maintained registries of American rabbis for many years, Dr. Linfield declared, and at no time was Solomon Eichenstein listed with them as a rabbi. His full name is Solomon Jacob Eichenstein, better known as Zeldele Eichenstein. He is registered with the Bureau as the finance secretary of a small congregation in Manhattan. His function is to collect the dues of the members of the congregation. The Jewish Statistical Bureau is under united Jewish religious auspices representing all the national Jewish federations of congregations and all the national associations of rabbis. Persons connected with a church in a minor position, Dr. Linfield explained, often claim to be priests, ministers, or rabbis, whenever they need protection.

MARRIAGES

GUTTMAN-MORENSTEIN

The marriage of Miss Reva Morenstein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Morenstein, 5675 Esplanade Avenue, to David Guttman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Guttman, 4229 Esplanade Avenue, took place in Adath Israel Synagogue, on Tuesday, June 14, at half-past seven o'clock, Rabbi Charles Bender officiating. The bride, who was given in marriage by her parents, wore a white satin gown, fashioned with a form-fitting bodice, trimmed with seed pearl beading, which also outlined the neckline; long sleeves, ending in points; a sweetheart neckline, and skirt, which was draped to a bustle effect in the back, extending into a short train. Her heart-shaped headdress was of satin, and she carried a cascade bouquet of white roses. Miss Clara Morenstein, sister of the bride, was maid of honour, wearing a yellow net gown, designed with an off-the-shoulder neckline, and bouffant skirt, with picture hat of yellow taffeta to match, and carrying a cascade bouquet of deep red roses. Misses Ruth Lasser and Rita Frohlich were junior bridesmaids, wearing identical, off-the-shoulder taffeta gowns having full skirts, the former in yellow and the latter in blue. They had taffeta bonnets to match and carried nosegays. Leo Guttman, brother of the groom, was best man. The chapel of the synagogue was decorated with standards of flowers, and the canopy with pink and white flowers and candelabra. Organ music was played during the ceremony. The community hall, where the reception took place, was decorated with palms and standards of flowers, and there were centerpieces of flowers on the tables. The bride's mother received in a beaver-brown tissue faille dinner gown, having a sweetheart neckline, long sleeves, and a full skirt, a toast-coloured tulle hat, trimmed with small pink roses, and a corsage of Sweetheart roses. The groom's mother wore a grey crepe dinner gown, trimmed with silver beading on the bodice and at the neckline, a grey tulle hat, and corsage of Sweetheart roses. The couple left on a trip to Virginia Beach, Va., and to New York, by plane, the bride travelling in a navy-blue suit, pink blouse, navy-blue straw hat, trimmed with a pink and navy-blue taffeta bow, and navy-blue accessories. They are residing at 1225 Mackay Street. Mr. and Mrs. A. Greene, Miss Laila Greenberg, of Oshawa, Ont.; Miss Rose Medler, of Windsor, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. J. Schwartzman, of Quebec City; Mr. and Mrs. A. Bressler, Mr. and Mrs. B. Fenischel, of Washington, D.C.; and Mrs. L. Herer and family, of New York, were wedding guests.

The Original Mr. Emmanuel

By Louis Golding

I will go on calling him "Mr. Emmanuel," for that is the name I have given him in the two novels by myself which have been most widely read, Magnolia Street and Mr. Emmanuel. That was not his real name but his family survives him and I will go on calling him "Mr. Emmanuel." He is dead now and I feel myself free to tell his tale.

He was actually a teacher of Hebrew to small boys in the Jewish working-class district of Manchester, my native town. In my books I made him the Secretary to the Jewish Board of Guardians which, technically, he was not. He was the unofficial secretary to every activity, public or private, which had for its object the alleviation of the sufferings of human beings.

And when I say human beings I mean exactly that. I have never met an individual who was so completely filled with the sense of the oneness of Jew and Gentile, Englishman and Spaniard—white man and yellow man, greybeard and small child. If a creature was human and in pain or sorrow, he was his slave. All the resources of his curiously rich spirit were at his disposal, his sense of humour, his gift of clowning, his stock of poetry in Russian and English, Hebrew and Yiddish, which all sounded like one and the same language. But the spirit was usually not enough. He would empty his own wallet and his wife's larder. It would be acutely embarrassing to his wife to find the Sabbath chicken missing, the chicken she had so devoutly plucked and cleaned and laid aside for the benediction of her shining brass candle-sticks. When he had denuded himself, Mr. Emmanuel would walk his shoes off to the uppers, enlisting the support of the rich folk of our town. He was a good man.

As he walked along Magnolia Street the children from both sides of the Street, Jewish and Gentile, would come whooping over to him, to dig their hands into the deep pocket of his frockcoat for the lollipops down there. There was a certain friction now and again between the children, and their elders too, but the sight of Mr. Emmanuel was oil on the waters. I recall an occasion when the children of both sides of the street got together to plague a Chinese who had opened the first Chinese laundry in our parts. They broke a window. They surged in and scattered his linen on the floor.

Then Mr. Emmanuel showed how terrible he might be, terrible as an army with banners. Finally, having reduced the children to penitent tears, in Ching Loo's back parlour he gathered the shirts and collars together, and there was a merrymaking there which would have brought bright tears to your eyes.

But he was not all sweetness and light. He could be cantankerous, vain, and even something of a mischief-maker. It was chiefly in the domain of Mr. Billig, the match-maker, that he would set to and make mischief, if he believed that a marriage artificially and laboriously arranged by Mr. Billig could be of no profit to anyone else in the world than Mr. Billig, least of all to the intended victims. He would display a more than Machiavellian ingenuity in frustrating such a marriage. The epic encounter between Mr. Billig and Mr. Emmanuel in Mrs. Poyser's grocery store, after one particularly profitable tie-up was done to dust, affords one of the more heathen pages of the local chronicles.

He was exactly the sort of man for whom the Nazis reserved their most hysterical hatred. And it was not without significance that the first swastika to appear in our street, chalked up in the night by some furtive Nazi thug, was sprawled like some evil spider across his front door. There was something of St. George about him, and he met dragons enough in his time; and even more, there was something of Don Quixote, with those long shanks, that scrawny neck, those piercing eyes.

He had not the faintest idea in the world that he was the model for my Mr. Emmanuel, so little did he have the power to see himself as others see him. And that was strange, for he divined with terrifying accuracy the original models for some of the hundreds of characters who figure in my Manchester Novels.

And when he lay dying, some twelve months or more ago, he said rather sadly, rather petulantly, to the daughter who was beside him: "So the business is really over now, eh, daughter? And what have I done with my life, eh? I ask you, what have I done? Have I painted pictures? Have I written books? Did I build bridges? I have been a failure! Yes, a complete failure. God should forgive me!"

And his daughter replied to him quietly: "Do you know, Daddy? I don't think you do. Do you know that but for you there would have been no 'Mr. Emmanuel' in Louis's books? I have it in a letter from Louis. Shall I show it to you?"

"Is it true, daughter?" the old man asked.

"It is true," she said.

The old man lay back on his pillow, and thought, and remembered. Then a slow wan smile of happiness spread across his face.

"I am glad," he whispered. "It is easier to die now."

There has not been, and cannot ever be, not till my dying day, a tribute of which I can be more fiercely proud.

RESTAURANT SANITATION

Laws, inspection and court action are necessary in accomplishing restaurant sanitation, but persistent education is essential for permanent results, states Homer N. Calver in an article—"The Thumb in the Soup", in Health, official magazine of the Health League of Canada. Mr. Calver is editor of Health Officers News Digest. He states that three groups must be reached by this education: (1) the people who own and operate public eating places, (2) those who work in them, and (3) those who eat there. Pure and undeteriorated food, protected from spoilage and infection served by non-infectious personnel with clean habits and in clean eating and drinking utensils are the public health requirement for eating and drinking places, Mr. Calver writes. Good light, good ventilation, and generally clean surroundings are most desirable attributes of any food handling establishment, but in the last analysis they have little direct bearing upon disease. Good equipment and proper supplies are useful in purveying a non-dangerous food, but they are not essential. "Stainless steel does not prevent the thumb in the soup," says Mr. Calver. "Many a lipstick-smeared glass emerges from inexpertly operated modern dishwashing equipment. The little ways in which foodhandlers work can have more effect on health than the most elaborate things they work with." The author remarks that a channel of infection runs from person to person via the things we eat and drink and the things we eat and drink from and with. The undisinfected glass can carry the bacteria and viruses of trench mouth, measles, influenza, scarlet fever and the common cold from mouth to mouth. The unwashed hands of a cook can spread typhoid and dysentery. The sore on the finger of a kindly member of the Ladies' Aid Society can poison the chicken salad for the church supper.

Every year about this time thousands of Canadians are soaking up every available bit of sunshine in the hope of acquiring "a healthy coat of tan" as soon as possible. But tanning, if it is to be done safely, is a slow process. To avoid painful and dangerous sunburn, expose yourself for only a short time at first, gradually lengthening the periods as a tan is acquired. Remember, sunburn can be dangerous as well as painful. Do your sunbathing sensibly.

JDC Publishes Warsaw Ghetto Study Of Hunger By Starving Doctors

What does it feel like to be starving to death? This was the subject of a scientific study, unique in medical history, undertaken in the Warsaw Ghetto during World War II by a group of Jewish physicians who, like their patients, were slowly dying of hunger. Originally written by hand in Yiddish, the manuscript of the Warsaw Ghetto physicians has just been published in Warsaw by the Joint Distribution Committee, major American agency aiding distressed Jews abroad.

JDC, which receives its funds through the $250,000,000 campaign of the United Jewish Appeal, published the work as part of its broad cultural and educational program in Poland. Its publications include Yiddish newspapers, histories of Polish Jewry during World War II, and other works. Other operations in Europe, North Africa and the Orient include relief, reconstruction and resettlement.

The story of the 500,000 Jewish men, women and children trapped behind the barbed wire of the Warsaw Ghetto, without soap, fuel, gas or electricity, with little water and less than 800 calories of nourishment daily, has been told. The final armed resistance of this little band, their heroic 42-day battle against the German army which ended with death to every ghetto fighter, has also been told.

But the story of the cooperative medical research carried out by 22 ghetto physicians who scientifically watched themselves and their families starve to death was unknown until the new volume was published recently. The work began in February, 1942, when the physicians, recognizing the opportunity to add to scientific knowledge of the effect of starvation on the human body, undertook the joint experiment. Many essential scientific instruments were lacking, but the physicians worked feverishly, without a day's interruption. In the time at their disposal they accumulated a quantity of experiments and observations which would have taken many years to collect under normal conditions.

The studies were made on children from six to 12 years and young adults from 20 to 40, ages chosen so that the biochemical changes of infancy, adolescence and advancing age would not bear on the studies of the effects of starvation itself. But despite the grim task the physicians had chosen for themselves there is no mention of Hitler in the 262 pages of the work. The word "Nazi" does not appear. There is no discussion of politics, no note of self-pity.

Among the earliest symptoms of hunger, the physicians noted, are the mental changes and attitudes of the children. Apathy, which increases with the progress of starvation, is one of the first characteristics of starvation it was learned. One physician reported:

"The organism which is destroyed by prolonged hunger is like a candle which burns out. Life disappears gradually without a visible shock to the naked eye.

"The hunger sufferer grows lazy. He is a miser who avariciously guards what is left to him —that is, his last physical reserves. His motions are calculated, his slowness, sometimes, even the complete lack of motion for several days, are very characteristic. His tendency to remain in a lying position, the somnolence, the silence, the sluggishness of the reflexes, the mental drowsiness — this is the customary picture of cachexia (marked ill health and malnutrition) due to hunger.

"Our study," the physician stated, "has aimed at an understanding of the mechanism which regulates this economizing of energy. The results should throw some light on the pathology of hunger. The material that was at our disposal cannot be compared with any thus far known because of its magnitude and the advanced degree of starvation."

The scientific study of starvation continued even after their equipment was destroyed, even after the subjects of the study themselves — the starving Jews of the ghetto — were led off to the extermination centers, until at last it was obvious that the manuscript must be smuggled out of the ghetto for safe keeping. Dr. Martin Gumpert, a physician and author, writing in a recent issue of "The American Scholar", declares that the Jewish physicians of the Warsaw Ghetto "have given scientists a book which will be a rewarding source of information. Even more: they have left the world an abiding testament to human self-respect and dignity."

New Yorkers Give 36 Million Dollars To Appeal

Approximately $36,000,000 has been contributed to date by New Yorkers toward the 1949 drive of the United Jewish Appeal, it was reported at a luncheon meeting of 500 community leaders at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

At the same time, Aubrey S. Eban, Israeli representative at the United Nations, emphasized the necessity for American Jews to continue their financial support—through the Appeal—in aiding his country to solve the immigration problem and to absorb newcomers into its economic structure.

"You cannot withhold your support from us at this time, unless you would deliberately and with set purpose, advise us to reject the children, the old, the infirm and the weak from amongst the myriads of immigrants who came to our shores," he said.

In stressing his government's "grave anxiety at the economic situation in Israel," Mr. Eban asserted that the "Government of Israel has defined in precise and generous terms a contribution that it is willing to make to the Arab refugee problem."

He said that this problem was "not of our creation; a problem arising from the fact that a war was launched against Israel, and the problem, therefore, the solution of which rests squarely upon the shoulders of those who created it by their action."

His government, he added, "has solemnly pledged itself to a heavy commitment for the repatriation of the tens of thousands of Arab refugees." He added:

"The fact that we took that initiative on behalf of the Arab refugees before a single Arab state amongst those responsible for its creation, has defined a single gesture of contribution to it, it is surely a magnificent token of the constructive and humanitarian spirit. Surely then, it is a gesture that should be spoken well of and without carping criticisms and future exactions."

Turning to Israel's austerity program, the Israeli diplomat called attention to the reduction of food consumption and said that "almost every room in Israel is a scene of voluntary or state-imposed hospitality."

"All this they have done on behalf of the displaced persons in Europe and Jewish communities in North Africa, to whom the responsibilities of Israel's Jews is exactly equal and not greater than is the responsibility of the Jews throughout the world," he said.

Bernard Baruch, Ex-Boss, Is Still Hero To Billy Rose

The following letter was written by Billy Rose to "The Anderson (S.C.) Daily Mail" on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the paper and the seventy-ninth birthday of Bernard M. Baruch, a native of South Carolina:

This is in answer to your letter of Aug. 5 in which you ask me to write a piece about Bernard M. Baruch for the fiftieth anniversary edition of "The Anderson Daily Maily". I'm glad to comply, because the date of your edition and Mr. Baruch's seventy-ninth birthday are almost identical.

There's an old saying that a man is never a hero to his valet, but like a lot of old sayings it's only partly true. For instance, I know of a certain native of South Carolina who, after thirty-two years, is still a hero to his old stenographer. And to stop beating around the blarney, the Carolinian is Bernard M. Baruch and the stenog is me.

It was in 1917, shortly after I went to work for the War Industries Board in Washington, that I first met the man I still call "boss," and even though I was only a kid at the time, he impressed me as a very special fellow — a man who was touched with what, for the want of a better word, I shall call "greatness".

Let's thumb through his record.

As head man of our economic machine in World War I, he used our industrial potential so effectively that Hindenburg wrote in his memoirs that Germany was beaten by Baruch.

In 1919, when he came back from the peace conference at Versailles, he told us the treaty wouldn't work.

In 1926, he listened to a group of Army men testify on heavy ordnance and, in a book he wrote the following year, he said he had been very much impressed with the testimony of one Douglas A. MacArthur — that the man would bear watching — there was a feel of genius about him.

In 1934, he warned President Roosevelt that Hitler was getting ready to put barbed wire around the world, and pleaded that he do something about it at once.

A year later, he pointed out to our Johnny-come-suddenly economists that plowing under cotton meant plowing under the dollar, and that slaughtering little pigs wouldn't bring home the bacon.

"Lay in a stockpile of rubber," he advised Congress a couple of years before World War II started. And when Jesse Jones fumbled the ball, he took over and got us the rubber we needed to stay on the road.

After the so-called peace, President Truman offered him the chairmanship of the Atomic Energy Commission. And when the newspapers announced that Old Silvertop had accepted, the whole country slept easy. We knew that with Bernie on the job, we were in good shape — that it was like having Joe Louis for a bodyguard.

"Why," I'm often asked by this or that chucklehead, "has the nation so much confidence in B. M. B.?" Well, I think I know some of the answers.

For one thing, we know that no yahoo in striped pants is going to fast-talk him out of anything — that after listening to the palaver of two wars, the old gentleman figures to be pretty expert at sifting out fact from fiddle-faddle. Moreover, he shapes up as the kind of fellow who isn't apt to fall asleep with his finger in somebody's mouth.

Another thing: We've all read enough about him to know that he doesn't scare easily; that as a young bucko on Wall Street he once told Old Man Morgan himself to go peddle his papers, and that a few years ago—in his seventies—he jumped out of a cab and flattened a plug-ugly who was abusing the taxi driver.

But perhaps, more than anything else, America trusts him because he has that thing which is rare even among horses—horse sense; the ability to size up a problem, break it down into little pieces, and come up with the answer.

To sum up: South Carolina has a lot to be proud of—its old plantations and gardens, the sea-coast around Myrtle Beach, the rolling fields of Aiken and the hill country west of Walhalla. And as for what it produces — well, up here in Yankeeland we build our houses out of its pine, thin out the paint with its turpentine, doll up in its cotton, smoke its tobacco and chew on its pecans.

But if South Carolina had produced nothing more than Bernard M. Baruch, it would still be one heck of a state.

Cordially,
BILLY ROSE.

tell of all the efforts the American government was making to induce the Arab states to be reasonable."

The meeting was highlighted by discussion and action taken upon a "program for action" submitted to the administrative council and executive committee by Mr. Frisch. This program included "the building of a number of colonies based on the principle of home ownership, on land remaining the property of the Jewish people as represented by the Jewish National Fund; a chain of small loan societies with their chief purpose of aiding the small trader and business man."

Other features included the building of one- or two-family houses for the "small man engaged in subsistence farming; and financial support through the ZOA to institutions serving social and medical needs of the middle class" in Israel.

Mr. Frisch called for a "thorough revision of both the aims and methods of Hebrew education in America." He added: "We must fearlessly think through the whole purpose of Jewish education in America in relation to our own mode of life as Jews and to the State of Israel."

The National Administrative Council, headed by Rudolf G. Sonneborn, endorsed in principle the recommendations of Mr. Frisch and instructed the national executive comittee and the inner committee to take all steps necessary toward their implementation.

Mr. Sonneborn, speaking, cautioned American Zionists not to impinge on prerogatives which belong to the state of Israel.

"The Zionist movement," Mr. Sonneborn said, "must adjust itself to the existence of the Jewish state which has sovereign responsibility. It cannot continue to act as though the state had not yet come into being. The Zionist movement, I am convinced, has a role to play, a role which shall strengthen Israel and enable it to achieve its program for the absorption of maximum immigration. We have a service to render with political, economic and moral support."

with them and it is presumed central Jewish relief agencies will shoulder the burden of financing the movement to Israel.

Jewish leaders said the Government was living up to its frequently made promise of permitting the exodus of those who want to leave. Other observers felt the Government desired to settle once and for all the problem of its Jewish minority.

By opening the door for one year to practically unrestricted emigration the Government could assume at the end of that time that those Jews who remain would devote their energies to the building of Poland. At the same time it would relieve the Government of the minority problem that remains as a result of the latent anti-Semitism that continues to exist despite the energetic attitude of the Government against all who encourage it.

Art Exhibit Includes Nuremberg Gift

People over America are getting acquainted with Jewish art through the 70 travelling exhibits which are booked by the Jewish Center Lecture Bureau of the National Jewish Welfare Board. Local citizens of 75 communities in half of the states in the U.S. had the opportunity of seeing from one to more than a dozen of these "portable exhibits" during the year. The Bureau makes them available at no cost except that of transportation. The 70 exhibits — 41 of which are mounted — have had 205 showings during the last 12 months. Almost 83% of the exhibits are of Jewish interest.

The four mobile shows people demand most are the two assembled by the Congress for Jewish Culture but booked exclusively by the JWB Jewish Center Lecture Bureau; a collection of Jewish religious objects stolen by the Nazis and rescued by the Jews of Nuremberg, and the exhibit of the American Jewish Historical Society. The art exhibits include original oil paintings by Jewish artists and are designed not only to promote an appreciation of Jewish art but to stimulate local exhibits of local artists as well. The collection of religious objects was given to American Jewry by Nuremberg Jews. The Nazis had stolen the items from synagogues they destroyed in Europe. The objects were deposited with JWB's Division of Religious Activities, which has made them available for exhibit purposes.

The exhibit of the American Jewish Historical Society includes early historical documents, portraits of men prominent in American Jewish history, commission papers of Jewish officers in American wars, broadsides and circulars on the founding of Jewish institutions, first editions of Hebrew grammar books, Bibles and prayer books published in the U.S., and other similar material. Samuel D. Freeman, the Bureau's director, points out that the exhibits are not only used as programs in themselves, but also as part of community celebrations, in connection with Jewish holidays, Jewish Music Festival, Jewish Book Month, and together with lectures on Jewish art.

Both Jews and Christians have viewed the exhibits, which are shown in just about every place that can accommodate them: Jewish Community Centers, synagogues, Hillel Foundations, schools, and public museums, and art galleries. In San Diego, Calif., 1500 people, many of them Christians, saw the exhibit of ceremonial objects. In Reno, Nevada, the paintings of Arthur Szyk were shown at Temple Emanu-El as well as at a meeting of the wives of the county's ministers. The Art Department at the Pennsylvania State College sent its art students on conducted tours of the exhibit. In Stockton, Calif., a Lutheran minister gave a sermon on the Passover Seder plate.

Behind the scenes much planning technique goes into the making of these exhibits. All insurance and packing are arranged, special cases being constructed for safety and ease in handling. With each exhibit, there are instructions for unpacking and repacking. The travelling exhibits are only part of the audio-visual services of the JWB's Jewish Center Lecture Bureau. Other audio-visual services provided by the Bureau include films, filmstrips and recordings. The Lecture Bureau also arranges lectures, forums, concerts, seminars, symposia, panel discussions, institutes, dramatic presentations, festival observances and study courses for Centers, synagogues, Jewish schools, local units of national organizations and other community groups. It works closely with communities in planning these activities to give them the maximum educational values, and to help them screen subjects and speakers.

Dr. Ludwig Lewisohn, professor of literature at Brandeis University, in Waltham, Mass., and author of many books, will appear as guest panelist in the Eternal Light's, "The Words We Live By," on Sunday, September 4, NBC network, 12.30-1.00 p.m. DST, auspices of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. This week, in observance of Labor Day, the discussion will be based upon Verses 12-15 from the 5th Chapter of Deuteronomy, and passages in Exodus which correspond to the Sabbatical Law. The panel, in addition to Dr. Lewisohn, will consist of Dr. Judah L. Goldin, associate professor of religion and Hillel Director at the University of Iowa, who is also moderator; Marie Syrkin, who has written and lectured extensively throughout the United States; and Marvin Lowenthal, distinguished critic and historian. Alexander Scourby will serve as reader.

"CANADA UNLIMITED"

The small circle of Micmac Indians on Isle de St. Croix listened intently to Marc Lescarbot. They were learning to read and write. The year was 1606—Lescarbot was Canada's first teacher.

In 1632, Canada's first college was started at Port Royal. A Huron Indian, Louis Vincent Sabatsanron, was the first Canadian to receive a Bachelor of Arts degree. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1781.

At Quebec in 1829, students paid $3 a year for tuition—board cost $80. Teachers received an average of $90 a year.

Education in Canada has grown with rapid strides. Now over one hundred and fifty thousand Canadians attend universities and colleges throughout the country. The future of the Canadian people goes hand in hand with pursuit of knowledge. Education increases opportunity. Yes, there's room to grow—in Canada Unlimited.
